Contact everyone involved through email. Add individuals to group chat application. Message people by text or call over the phone to confirm their availability.

What are some issues you generally face when planning and carrying your plans?

If I ask people to RSVP for an event, they will consistently ignore or omit this information. This makes getting an accurate or at least solid estimate of the attendance very difficult.

How would having a platform to help you organize, remind and communicate with attendees affect how you plan meetings/events/activities/etc.?

If my groups and organizations had one platform to coordinate all meeting related information, then I would be able to systematize how each meeting being set up could be carried out.

How do you normally get and stay in touch with people that you are attending something with?

GroupMe application, Emails, Phone Calls

How would having a platform to help you organize and remind you about your meetings/events/activities/etc. affect how many you attend?

If there was a process where organizations or groups were proactively determining a meeting schedule throughout the semester or at least a week in advance, then I would be able to organize my time around these commitments. I would be able to attend more meetings consistently through the semester.

If you had an app that helped you group people and organize meetings/events/activities what sort of features would you like to see it include?

RSVP option that could display (option to make visible or invisible) the individuals who have already committed to the event. Calendar that I could share publicly with other users of the application. The app users could update the calendar and people looking to set up meetings would look at everyone's availability. Maybe the application could super-impose the user's calendar and a list of other people (that they have searched and checked) so the app could already filter out all schedule conflicts and show the vacant times for possible meetings.
